

September 16, 2023

Dear Job Seekers,

Attached is the last at home training packet being offered by Vantage. After October 1, 2023 any individual without a training site will be placed on an unpaid leave of absence.

Attached is the assignment for September 16 - September 29. At the end of the pay period, you will need to send the completed Summary Questions sheet and training timesheet with the actual hours you worked on the packet (up to 20 per week), either by fax to 330-535-2253 or by email to payroll@vantageaging.org

This timesheet and summary questions are due by Monday, October 1st at 5:00 pm.

If you have any questions please call Dustin Henthorne 330-253-4597 ext. 352

Training – Weeks 9/16/23 to 9/29/23

Make Yourself Heard

Sincerely,

VANTAGE AGING SCSEP TEAM

SOFT SKILLS SOLUTIONS

Second Edition

Make Yourself Heard!

Professional Communication Skills

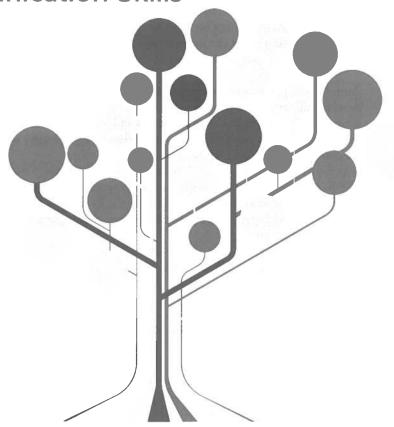

Ann Cross & Martha Lanaghen

Make Yourself Heard!

Professional Communication Skills

Ann Cross & Martha Lanaghen

Care has been taken to verify the accuracy of information presented in this book. However, the authors, editors, and publisher cannot accept responsibility for web, email, newsgroup, or chat room subject matter or content, or for consequences from the application of the information in this book, and make no warranty, expressed or implied, with respect to its content.

Some of the product names and company names included in this book have been used for identification purposes only and may be trademarks or registered trade names of their respective manufacturers and sellers. The authors, editors, and publisher disclaim any affiliation, association, or connection with, or sponsorship or endorsement by, such owners.

We have made every effort to trace the ownership of all copyrighted material and to secure permission from copyright holders. In the event of any question arising as to the use of any material, we will be pleased to make the necessary corrections in future printings.

Cover Image Credit: © shutterstock/Hilch

ISBNs 978-1-79244-359-6 (single) 978-1-79244-400-5 (10-PK)

© 2015, 2021 JIST Publishing, Inc., a division of Kendall Hunt 7900 Xerxes Avenue S STE 310 Minneapolis, MN 55431-1118 Email: service@jist.com

Website: JIST.com

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be adapted, reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise, without prior written permission from the publisher.

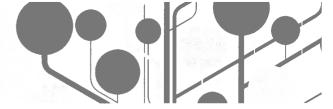

Preface
Program Featuresv.
Assessing Your Communication Skills
Self-Assessment: Communication Mistakes
Self-Assessment—Communication "Pro" or "Doh!" 4
Keys to Effective Communication: Active Listening
Why Listening Is Steeped in Problems
Self-Assessment—Listening Quiz
Six Actions for Effective Communication
Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part I11
Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part II
Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part III16
Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part IV18
Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part V
Communication Barriers21
Keys to Effective Communication: Active Speaking
Embrace Criticism
Be Tactful24
Apply the Skills—Respond with Tact
Be Honest
Apply the Skills—Give Honest Feedback

iii

Be Positive
Apply the Skills—Keep a Positivity Journal
Respect Confidentiality
Apply the Skills—Avoid Workplace Gossips
Be Patient28
Use a "We" Mentality
Apply the Skills—Identify the Words You Use
Avoid Absolutes30
Apply the Skills—Track Opinions Stated as Facts30
Attack Problems, Not Ideas
Apply the Skills—Redirect Ideas
Apply the Skills—Analyze How Well You Speak and Listen
Summary
Next Steps

PREFACE

Today's job seekers face tougher challenges than ever before. Only the most skilled job seeker can keep up with the ever-changing workplace. Technology is transforming how we work in dramatic ways, especially since the COVID-19 pandemic forced companies large and small to quickly adapt to new ways of doing business. This change contributes to what some people are calling the "fourth industrial revolution." Just as each of the past three industrial revolutions (the steam engine, mass production, and digitization) required workers to adapt their skills to keep up, this technological revolution is forcing us to rethink what we do and how we do it.

Having the newest computer skills or knowing how to provide remote customer service is only part of what new technology demands of workers. Employers today want more than someone with the necessary job-related skills. They are interested in your ability to do the things computers cannot do—in your uniquely human, interpersonal, "soft" skills. Soft skills are the personal attributes that enable you to interact effectively and harmoniously with other people. Simply put, they are the skills an employee needs to get along and work well with others.

A recent survey found that dependability and reliability are the soft skills employers desire most. These skills were noted by 97 percent of respondents, and professionalism was overwhelmingly listed in the top 10 skills employees need to succeed.² Professionalism encompasses multiple soft skills, including (but not limited to) communication, time management, self-management, leadership, problem-solving, and teamwork skills. It is also essential to professional success to be able to excel in a diverse workplace, where people look, think, experience, and interact with the world in a wide variety of ways.

The Soft Skills Solutions, Second Edition program will help you learn about and practice soft skills that will set you apart from others in your field.

^{1.} Klaus Schwab, "The Fourth Industrial Revolution: What It Means and How to Respond," Foreign Affairs, December 12, 2015, https://www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/2015-12-12/fourth-industrial-revolution.

^{2.} Society for Human Resource Managment, "SHRM/Mercer Survey Findings: Entry-Level Applicant Job Skills," 2016, https://www.shrm.org/hr-today/trends-and-forecasting/research-and-surveys/PublishingImages/Pages/Entry-Level-Applicant-Job-Skills-Survey-/Entry-Level%20Applicant%20 Job%20Skills%20Survey.pdf.

The Soft Skills Solutions Second Edition program includes the following books:

- 1. Stepping Stones to Success! Goals & Attitude
- 2. Navigate Workplace Challenges! Emotional Intelligence & Critical Thinking
- 3. Wake Up & Work! Keys to Self-Management
- 4. Make Yourself Heard! Professional Communication Skills
- 5. How You Act & Dress Matters! Professional Etiquette & Image
- 6. Set the Tone! Equity, Diversity & Inclusion
- 7. Demonstrate Your Value through Collaboration! Teamwork & Motivation
- 8. Play Nice & Stay Employed! Workplace Relationships & Conflict Negotiations
- 9. Lead with Integrity! Leadership & Ethics
- 10. Step Up Your Game! Innovation & Creative Problem-Solving

Each title concentrates on specific soft skills to help you reach skill mastery. Whether you are a new job seeker, a person reentering the work world, a recent college graduate, or a longtime employee, completing these exercises to master these important soft skills will help you now and for the rest of your life. Even the most seasoned professionals will benefit from refreshing their soft skills from time to time.

Try to complete one book from the Soft Skills Solutions, Second Edition program per week. Although it may be helpful to begin with Stepping Stones to Success! Goals & Attitude followed by the other titles in the program, these books are stand-alone pieces and can be used in any sequence.

Program Features

Each Soft Skills Solutions, Second Edition book introduces skills necessary for success in the workplace and explains their roles in employment success. The program provides self-assessment activities to identify and address your individual needs, and application activities to challenge you and allow you to practice your skills. The text also includes margin tips and informative sidebars to point out key information.

You will encounter these interactive features:

- Thinking Breaks
- Self-Assessment activities

Thinking Breaks Part of learning a new skill is being able to apply it to your own experiences. These thought-provoking questions require reflection and honesty. Answering them will help you identify your personal opinions and beliefs relating to a specific aspect of employment success.

Self-Assessment activities The self-assessment activities help you assess your current soft skill levels and provide brief snapshots of your strengths and weaknesses. The more honest your answers, the more accurately you will be able to identify areas for improvement.

If the assessment section indicates that your skill level is high, you should still practice the workout, and challenge yourself to attain skill mastery by mentoring or teaching that skill to another person. Attempting to teach others how to successfully master a skill is the ultimate test of your knowledge.

The self-assessment tool is for your own personal use. After you have identified areas in which you would like to improve, practice these exercises and continue to seek out ways to strengthen your competencies in your daily life.

Apply the Skills activities After skills are introduced and explained, Apply the Skills activities challenge you to use these skills. Complete these exercises daily until you've achieved mastery of the professionalism skill you are studying. Some of the activities require working with a partner or mentor. For others, working with a partner or mentor is simply recommended.

When choosing a study partner, seek out a supportive person who wants to see you succeed. Above all, your partner should be honest with you about your current skill level. Your ability do the same for your partner is essential to your partner's success as well. You will share equally in your progress and take an active role in each other's individual success, so choose wisely.

Having a mentor is ideal. Your mentor should be a professional in a position of authority with whom you have a positive relationship. For example, you might seek out a teacher, boss, friend who is a manager or executive at a company, career services advisor, student advisor, human resources manager, current employer, or parent.

Employment success largely depends on your ability to identify and address areas in which you need to improve. To accomplish this, be willing to receive feedback from others. If you are not able to receive this kind of feedback easily—and if you get upset, angry, or defensive—then seek the help of a trusted expert who can help you learn to give and receive constructive feedback before beginning the

Make Yourself Heard! Professional Communication Skills

OBJECTIVES

Completing this book will allow you to

- Understand the role communication plays in achieving a high level of success in the workplace (Section 4.1)
- Learn and practice the six steps of communication (Section 4.2)
- Understand and practice active listening (Section 4.2)
- Learn how to reflect back what you are hearing (Section 4.2)
- Understand barriers that inhibit effective communication (Section 4.3)
- Learn the skills necessary for powerful communication (Section 4.4)

out of 10

During your career, you will inevitably encounter difficult situations and hard-to-please coworkers, customers or clients, and bosses. But communicating is more than just possessing "the gift of gab" or an expansive vocabulary. In fact, it can be quite the opposite, especially when dealing with difficult professional encounters. You will need to use effective communication skills to arrive at a positive outcome.

4.1 Assessing Your Communication Skills

Communication is a process by which information is exchanged between individuals. There are three types of communication:

- Verbal: Spoken words (what you say and hear)
- Nonverbal: Body language, facial expressions, hand gestures, and so on (how you deliver or receive messages)

• Written: Email, text, workplace chat such as Microsoft Teams or Slack, letters, and so on (the words you write)

Why are communication skills so important? Good communication skills have many benefits:

- They can balance a lack of technical or clinical skills when you are starting a new job or position.
- They can improve results, save time, and increase productivity.
- They can improve cooperation, making for a stronger team.
- They can reduce stress and increase job satisfaction.

In addition to these benefits, taking care to communicate well will prove to your coworkers and employers that you care about their feedback. It also will prove that you are willing to listen to others and work to understand workplace conflicts. Good communicators often emerge as leaders within an organization. Poor communication, in contrast, will lead to mistakes, loss of productivity, and even damaged professional relationships.

Communication can make all the difference. This book walks you through everything you need to know about professional communication and how to become an effective communicator. Using the information and activities provided, you will develop communication skills that are necessary for your career success. First, let's see how well you currently communicate.

Self-Assessment—Communication Mistakes

For each question below, check the box in the column that best describes you. Answer questions as you actually are (rather than how you think you should be).

Have You Ever	Yes	No

- 1. Thought about what you wanted to say next while others were talking?
- 2. Attacked people and not problems when you spoke?
- 3. Overused absolutes such as always or never?
- 4. Rolled your eyes when someone said something you disagreed with?
- 5. Blamed others when conversations took a wrong turn?

continues...

- Have You Ever . . . Yes No
- 6. Repeated instructions or concepts over and over?
- 7. Assumed you knew what the speaker was going to say?

If you answered "Yes" to any of the preceding questions, congratulations! You are human!

You may be guilty of at least a few of these actions, which is why practicing professional communication should be a lifelong exercise.

ľ	are most guilty of making.

Earlier you answered on a scale of 1 to 10 how good are you at communicating. Herein lies part of the problem: the most challenging part of developing strong communication skills is that most people feel they are already quite good at communicating. Often, the people you would describe as the most adept communicators are simply good speakers. But communication is much more than the ability to eloquently state a case or make a point. Good communication requires the ability to be quiet and listen!

Listening should be active. Active listening helps to minimize misunderstandings and miscommunication. Misunderstandings are a part of life, but your ability to recognize and correct these misunderstandings will elevate you from a good communicator to a superior communicator.

Self-Assessment—Communication "Pro" or "Doh!"

For each statement, check the box in the column that best describes you. Answer questions as you actually are (rather than how you think you should be).

Statement Always Sometimes Rarely

- 1. I try to anticipate and deal with problems and confusion when communicating with others.
- 2. If I do not understand something, I ask for clarification, even if I think others might view my question as "stupid."
- 3. I regularly find that people understand what I tell them.
- 4. When engaging in a conversation, I give the speaker my full attention.
- 5. I consider how my words will be perceived by others and sometimes change the way I say something so that it is better received.
- I give careful consideration to the feeling of others when speaking, and I sometimes don't speak my mind.
- 7. When people tell me something I don't agree with, I try to first see it from their perspective before responding with how I feel.
- 8. I avoid using email to communicate complex issues with people.
- When I finish writing a report, memo, or email, I review it thoroughly for misspellings and missed words before I send it.

continues...

Statement Always Sometimes Rarely

- 10. When talking to people, I pay attention to their body language.
- 11. I use diagrams and charts to help express my ideas.
- 12. Before I send a message, I think about the best way to communicate it (in person, over the phone, in an email or memo, and so on).
- 13. I slow my rate of speech when providing or verifying information.
- 14. I consider cultural barriers when planning my communications.
- 15. Before I communicate, I think about what the person needs to know and how best to convey that information.

Use the following scale to add up the points for each of your answers and record your total in the box that follows.

Tally Your Score

Always = 5 points

Sometimes = 3 points

Rarely = 1 point

Total Score:

- 50 to 75 points: Excellent! You understand your role as a communicator, both when you send messages and when you receive them. You anticipate problems, and you choose the most effective ways of communicating.
- 31 to 49 points: You should keep working to improve your communication skills. You may not be expressing yourself clearly, and you may not be receiving messages correctly. By paying attention to communication, you can be much more effective at work and enjoy much better working relationships.
- 30 or fewer points: You have poor communication skills, and you should work quickly and diligently to improve these skills.

	1. Tile stine Communications to Effective Communication:
Active Li	stening
Active Li	stening ment and write down the names of three people you would
Take a mo	stening
Active Li	stening ment and write down the names of three people you would

Communication "Pro" or "Dohl" Solf-Analysis

Of the people on your list, is there anyone that you don't like? Of the people you identified, are they all people whom you either like, love, or respect a great deal?

Most likely, the people whose influence on your life has been the most profound are people you would also classify as great listeners.

It's no coincidence that good listeners are well liked and respected. Therefore, if one of your goals at work is to be liked, loved, or respected, then you must become a good listener!

The act of listening requires a sender (the speaker, who sends the information) and a receiver (the person who hears and interprets the information).

The sender's information should be clear, concise, and to the point. That is, it must be "catchable." The receiver's task is to interpret the sender's message, both verbal and nonverbal, with as little distortion as possible.

information, the receiver must "decode" the speaker's message using a combination of verbal and nonverbal cues to interpret the true meaning of the message.

Why Listening Is Steeped in Problems

Listening is so problematic because everything you say is processed (or filtered) through communication filters (the recipient's personal experiences) or, as discussed later, communication barriers. These filters begin developing as soon as you are born and are derived from life experiences and cultural or societal influences, and both verbal and nonverbal cues. Communication obstacles specific to listening include the following:

Perceptions Words and actions can be easily misconstrued or taken out of context. An effective communicator is always aware of how the audience perceives tone and body language. Often a speaker who communicates in a condescending or arrogant manner will cause the audience to disengage from the conversation.

Misconceptions Life experience forms a person's opinions. Therefore, it will affect how that person receives your message. Asking questions to better understand where a person is coming from or what facts are contributing to an opinion is known as the process of "discovery." This notion of understanding a person's life experience emphasizes the importance of the discovery portion of every conversation because it helps you avoid misinterpreting or misreading a person's message based on your own life experiences.

For example, say you grew up in an environment where people who speak loudly are also prone to anger. In that case, when you encounter someone who loudly says, "I WANT TO ASK YOU A QUESTION," you may assume the underlying message is that the person is mad about something you did.

You'll know you've misunderstood a person's meaning when that person becomes emotional or upset or says things like, "That's not what I meant!" or "Why are you getting so defensive?" Knowing as much as possible about how the person thinks and feels may affect the words you choose when communicating with different audiences.

Facts versus opinions When you are engaged in active listening, listen for whether people state an opinion as a fact. Stating an opinion as a fact is misleading. This is why it is important to include facts (and their sources) whenever possible when you shift from the listener role to the speaking role. Don't state your opinion as fact because the listener may ask you to provide proof that this information is correct. The listener may also have opinions or knowledge that are in conflict with the information you've provided and use those perceptions to decide that you are lying. This step is crucial in achieving effective outcomes from any conversation in which you engage because facts are required to support opinions and decisions.

You can address and manage these obstacles effectively, but first you must identify your own views on listening and how your views apply to effective communication.

8

Self-Assessment—Listening Quiz

Take the following quiz to determine your own ideas about listening. When you are finished, read through the answers and explanations of each item that follows.

Statement True False

- 1. Hearing and listening are the same.
- 2. There is only one true meaning for a word.
- 3. To be a good listener, you need to know why you are listening.
- 4. Letting people know you've heard them is part of listening.
- 1. Hearing and listening are the same. False. Hearing and listening are different because they literally require the use of two different mechanisms in your brain:
 - Hearing: To perceive sound.
 - Listening: To pay attention to the sound or words with thoughtful intention.

Ideally, you need to both hear and listen to fully understand what is being said. When you hear, you are absorbing the speaker's pitch and tone, which can help you learn about the speaker's emotional state. When you listen, you have the intention to understand the speaker. Doing so requires you to interpret what the speaker is saying and provide feedback to the speaker based on how you interpret the message.

- 2. There is only one true meaning for a word. False. The meaning of the word is not actually in the word itself, but in the context of the statement. Consider, for example, the word cool. The listener will interpret the meaning of the word cool depending on several factors, such as the context in which it is used, the speaker's tone, the recipient's own filters, and even geographical location. No two people perceive a message in the same way, even though the same words are being used.
- 3. To be a good listener, you need to know why you are listening. True. Regardless of the situation, it is important to know the reason for listening. For example, let's say you enter into a conversation in which the speaker hopes you will both have fun, but you believe that you are about to be reprimanded. In that case, every statement the speaker makes is subject to serious misinterpretation. If the speaker starts to tease you about a mistake and you believe it to be serious—well, you can see how things can turn ugly quickly.
- 4. Letting people know you've heard them is part of listening. True. Letting the speaker know you've understood the message by providing feedback is an important part of effective listening. It will keep the conversation moving and let the speaker know that you have, in fact, fully understood the message. Providing feedback is even more important when you're talking on the phone because it is impossible for the speaker to pick up on your nonverbal cues.

Reduce Background Noise

Whether working from home or in an office, some people work better with background noise. However, most are distracted by any sort of background noise. Background noise can be particularly troublesome when on a virtual meeting like Zoom; finding a quiet space is critical to conducting a productive meeting. If you are in an open office without doors, try to find a quiet space to have important conversations. Whenever possible, close your door and eliminate as many background noises as possible.

Soft Skills Solutions Professional Communication Skills

Six Actions for Effective Communication

To be an effective listener, you can take some simple actions that will let the speaker know that you are engaged, receptive, and interested—allwithout ever saving a word! These behaviors are particularly important in a job interview, during a difficult conversation, or in a team meeting.

There is more to active listening than just hearing and listening with intent. You have to become an active participant in the communication process to ensure that the message you're hearing is the one the speaker intends to send. Being an active participant may require that you ask questions to further your understanding of the situation. Perhaps most important, you need to reflect back to the sender what you heard in your own words. Only then should you respond with a solution to the problem presented or with your own feelings about the situation.

1. Pay Attention Give the speaker your undivided attention by looking the person directly in the eye. Focus on what the person is saying without thinking how you might respond. As you listen, acknowledge the speaker's message. Acknowledging the message can be as simple as nodding your head or saying "uh-huh" or "yes." If appropriate, taking notes is a nonverbal way of acknowledging the speaker.

Minimize Distractions

Maintaining eye contact is crucial in communication. Try to minimize distractions during in-person and virtual meetings:

- Turn off electronics and, when meeting in person, turn away from your computer screen.
- Manage your apps and notifications to reduce distractions.
- Listen with an open mind. We tend to start forming our response when we hear something we disagree with. Focus on keeping your attention on the speaker, not your reply.
- Move to a guiet area if possible.

2. Consider Your Posture Maintain a relaxed and open posture. If possible, squarely face the speaker. Avoid slouching because this pose may indicate that you're bored or uninterested. Instead, lean toward the speaker, which is a nonverbal indicator that you are interested in what the speaker has to say. Having an open and relaxed posture will not only help the speaker remain calm, but also show that you are open to the speaker's message.

Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part I

Complete the following activities to apply what you have learned about active listening. This exercise has five parts. One part will help you notice how often you want to interrupt or let your mind drift. Another will help you listen with real intent on understanding the speaker's message. The third part will help you reflect back to the speaker what you heard. The fourth examines whether you are responding with empathy. And the fifth part focuses on providing feedback to the speaker.

First, find a partner or study buddy. Your study buddy should be anyone with whom you have a positive relationship. This person also should be interested in improving listening skills. Most important, this person should be someone from whom you receive feedback without getting upset or defensive.

Second, determine who will be the speaker first. Ideally, you will use your cell phone or a watch to time the sections of this exercise.

Workout 1

Speaker Talk about a problem you have or have had in the past. It can be something unimportant, such as how to pick the right line at the grocery store, or something more important, such as what car to purchase. The aim is to talk about a real challenge you have faced or are facing.

Listener Just listen. Do not talk, ask questions, or problem solve. However, each time that you want to say something, make a check mark ✓ in the box below or on a separate piece of paper.

At the end of the exercise, count up the number of check marks the listener had and then switch roles. Practice this workout at least once a day until you receive fewer than 10 check marks. When you are under 10, this indicates that you were truly focused on what the speaker was telling you and not on what you wanted to say.

ンプレン Workout 1 can be done with or without a partner. If you do not have a partner, simply complete the listener's part of the exercise when you listen to your friends and family during your everyday interactions.

Workout 2

ът.

Speaker Talk for five minutes about a subject in which you have great interest (for example, cooking, hiking, or children). As you talk, pay attention to verbal and nonverbal cues the listener is sending, which indicates a level of interest in what you have to say.

Listener As the speaker is talking, work on your verbal acknowledgments such as saying "yes, I see" or "uh-huh." Also, practice maintaining eye contact, sitting forward, and providing any other nonverbal cues you can send that show the speaker you are interested in the communication.

Switch roles. When you have completed the exercise in person, practice this workout again over the phone, and then on a video call. Notice how verbal cues become even more important when you cannot see each other, and how attentive body language is especially key when you can only see each other on a screen.

After you complete the exercise, provide feedback on how well the listener appeared to be engaged and whether the listener appeared to be listening. Provide examples whenever possible.

Notes:

3. Ask for Clarification Open-ended questions cannot be answered with a simple "yes" or "no" response. They require the speaker to provide more detail and elaborate on the message. Ouestions beginning with what, why, or how are open-ended questions. Asking open-ended questions demonstrates to the speaker that you are genuine in your desire to fully understand the message.

TIP Open-ended questions will extract more information than "yes" or "no" questions. This is another valuable tool in effective communication!

Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part II

Complete the following activities to apply what you have learned about active listening. This part (Part II) will help you listen with a real intention of understanding the speaker's message.

Workout 3

Speaker Describe a dream vacation, but don't tell your partner the destination.

Listener Ask open-ended questions to get the speaker to elaborate the details of the destination, but don't guess what it is.

This exercise should last about five minutes. At the end of the conversation, the listener should try to guess the destination based on the information provided. Switch roles when you are done.

Workout 4

Speaker Think of a specific problem you are having (or have had) with a piece of equipment you use or a service you receive (such as your mobile phone or Internet carrier). Explain to your partner in broad, vague terms the problem you experienced. Then see whether you and your partner can uncover the main problem and come up with a solution. For example, perhaps you tell your partner that your new computer isn't working. It's not only causing you a high level of frustration but also preventing you from being productive. As you communicate, see whether you can uncover the real problem. For example, you don't know how to organize your files on the new system because you can't organize your files the way you like. Therefore, you've made a blanket statement that the computer just "isn't working."

Listener Ask questions to help identify the main problem the speaker is having. After you determine what the real problem is, you can end the exercise.

12

Switch roles multiple times, using different problems, until you find that asking questions becomes natural to you and you don't have to think as much about what to ask.

Notes:

4. Reflect What the Speaker Says Paraphrasing or restating the speaker's message in your own words lets the speaker know that you are interested. It also gives that person the opportunity to clarify the message. To be clear, reflecting is not repeating what the speaker said word for word. It is restating what was said in your own words.

For example, the speaker says, "I am really upset because one minute I'm told to do a job one way by one person, and the next minute I'm told to do something totally different by someone else." You might paraphrase by saying, "It sounds as though you're saying there is a lack of communication among the staff." This allows the speaker a chance to restate if you did not hear the intended message.

For some people, reflection is the most difficult part of the communication process because it involves real thought on the listener's part. However, it can become a natural part of your communication process if you are continually asking yourself throughout a conversation:

- "What did I just hear the speaker say?"
- "What does that mean to me?"
- "Does what the speaker just conveyed make sense to me?"

After you ask yourself these questions, simply state them out loud by using lead-in statements such as these:

- "What I hear you saying is..."
- "I believe that means..."
- "I want to be clear about what you are saying because I'm not sure I fully understand..."

Reflection takes practice—a lot of practice. If it is not something you do naturally, find a person to work with (a spouse, parent, or friend). Let this person know that you are trying to develop this skill and ask for help.

There is another way to recognize that you've failed to reflect during a conversation. You have failed if you respond to someone during a conversation or provide a solution, opinion, or advice, and that person says one of the following:

- "That's not what I meant."
- "You're missing the point."
- "That won't work."
- "You aren't listening!"

These types of statements indicate that you need to go back and start over to better understand what the speaker is trying to say.

Getting It "Wrong"—Restating the Message

After restating what you have heard, don't worry if the speaker says, "No, that's not what I'm saying." This is another opportunity for the speaker to further clarify the message and the listener to gain a better understanding. Often, people will jump into a conversation before they are even clear about what they want to say or what the problem really is. One approach is to say, "I'm sorry. I'm not sure I understood you well enough. Can you explain that in another way? I really want to understand what you are trying to tell me."

If the message still isn't clear after several attempts to understand, offer to "table" the conversation if possible. This means moving on to another topic and continuing the conversation at a later time.

Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part III

Complete the following activity to apply what you have learned about active listening. This part (Part III) will help you reflect back to the speaker what you heard.

Workout 5

Speaker Share a real or made-up problem you are experiencing at work, home, or school. As you describe what is happening, allow the listener to ask you questions and reflect back to you what the listener understands you to be saying. If the listener misunderstands, redirect and restate in other terms what you are saying.

Listener Take notes, ask questions, and reflect back to the speaker to ensure that you fully understand. After each reflection, move forward or ask for more clarity if you are "off base."

At the end of this exercise, switch roles. Then discuss with one another the following questions and record your observations in the space provided:

Did I restate i		words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo
Did I restate i	in my own	words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo
Did I restate i	in my own	words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo
	in my own	words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo
Did I restate i	in my own	words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo
Did I restate i	in my own	words wha	t I unders	cood or just repo

powerful communicators to r	edirect (others 1	toward feelings or to refocus interacti	ions on	finding	g soluti finger-pointing or blame.

How did this help move the conversation forward:
How did this process of reflection make you feel?

Repeat this exercise often.

Frustrations

continues...

In some instances, the speaker may become frustrated by the reflection process because that person is failing to effectively communicate feelings, needs, or the situation. This is a common experience because you (the speaker) often aren't entirely clear in expressing what you are trying to say. This is an excellent chance to avoid going down a path that may ultimately lead to problems and mistakes! It is the speaker's responsibility to be clear about a problem or a need. Until the speaker is able to clearly communicate a desire, solutions or progress cannot really be made.

5. Show Empathy Empathy is understanding and sharing another person's experiences and emotions or having the ability to imagine someone else's feelings. People are recognized as powerful communicators by the empathy they show, not by how they agree with everyone all the time. Rather, they empathize with the feelings of others. This ability to make people feel understood (and calm) allows more positive ons rather than

Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part IV

Complete the following activity to apply what you have learned about active listening. This part (Part IV) will help you consider how you can respond with empathy.

Workout 6

Think of a recent conversation in which you could have empathized with a person even though you didn't agree. Record the scenario below. Then identify how you could have phrased your empathetic statement so that the person with whom you were communicating would be more receptive to your opinion or solution.

Continue recording scenarios that could have benefited from a more empathetic response for one week. After each conversation, take time to reflect how you used (or failed to use) empathy to create receptiveness to your ideas.

6. Give Feedback Only after you're certain you understand the real problem should you offer feedback (solutions). In the earlier example of the person who was upset because he was constantly being told different ways to do the same job, you might say, "I can see why you feel frustrated by the lack of communication. Have you considered what you can personally do to improve the situation? Let's discuss ways that you can become part of a solution to fix this problem."

This approach will allow the speaker to feel heard and understood. At the same time, it will also refocus attention on a more positive and proactive approach to the situation.

Providing Feedback

If you've gone through the communication process effectively, by listening and asking questions, the speaker will arrive at a conclusion. Therefore, when you provide feedback, it is more often in the form of positive reinforcement of the conclusion or solution the speaker has arrived at over the course of your conversation.

This kind of "exploring" and "guiding" the conversation takes many years of conscious practice and work. After you've developed and improved the communication basics discussed, you may want to continue practicing and learning more about communication.

O

Apply the Skills—Practice Active Listening: Part V

Complete the following activity to apply what you have learned about active listening. This part (Part V) will help you reflect on how a listener can provide feedback to a speaker.

Workout 7

Speaker Imagine that you and your partner are coworkers. You are constantly complaining about how you never get asked to participate in all the "important" work and "big decisions" that are being made every day in the department. You tell your coworker that you believe the boss has a personal grudge against you. The reason is that you once showed her up in a meeting by sharing a brilliant idea that made her look bad for not thinking of such an obvious solution herself.

Listener Your coworker is complaining about never getting invited to help in problem solving within the department. You know your coworker isn't asked to participate because the person dominates every conversation and has an attitude of "it's my way or the highway." You want to help your coworker come to realize that this habit is standing in the way of success. Before you begin, write down some questions you might ask to lead your coworker to the conclusion that the problem isn't with the boss, but lies in the coworker's own behavior. Then, as you listen to the speaker, ask clarifying questions to make sure you fully understand the problem. Empathize with your coworker and provide feedback by rephrasing what the speaker said. Finally, after you feel you fully understand the problem, help the speaker come to a solution by either giving some suggestions or working to solve the problem together.

record your observations in the space provided: 1. What did the listener do that helped you better understand the situation? 2. What did the listener do that made you feel that you had clearly communicated your problem? 3. What did the listener do that helped you most? 4. What could the listener have done that would have helped you come to a solution on your own more quickly?

At the end of the exercise, discuss the following questions and

4.3 Communication Barriers

Communication fails for many reasons. In most failed communication, the message was not received exactly the way the sender intended. This is why it is important that the person speaking continually seek feedback to check that the message is clearly understood. When you are the listener, acknowledging what you've heard to ensure you fully understand what is said is equally important.

The skills of active listening, clarification, and feedback help, but skilled communicators also need to be aware of any existing communication barriers to be truly successful.

Common communication barriers include the following:

- Poor organization: Workplaces can create communication barriers when they lack clear communication channels or when the roles and responsibilities of each employee are not defined.
- Negative attitudes: Negativity is a barrier because it is easily communicated with both verbal and nonverbal cues (such as folding one's arms or rolling one's eyes).
- Lack of attention, interest, and respect: If a listener is not actively engaged in a conversation (for whatever reason), then that person often misses important details.
- Prejudices and stereotypes: Personal opinions and prejudices often lead to false assumptions about what is being communicated.
- Preconceived notions: Assumptions based on what one expects to hear prevent a person from listening actively.
- Jargon or overly complicated terms: Not everyone will understand jargon or industry-specific words and phrases.
- Differing viewpoints: Some people choose not to listen to different perspectives or viewpoints.
- Cultural barriers: Cultures may differ in their communication styles, including acceptable speaking volume, eye contact, and topics of conversation.
- Language: Non-native speakers and native speakers may have difficulty understanding one another.
- Accessibility: Communication methods may need to be altered to accommodate people with hearing and/or vision loss.
- Emotional responses: Emotions such as frustration, anger, joy, and sadness can affect how a person communicates.
- Ambiguous tone: Tone and tenor (how you sound and the volume used) is often a barrier in verbal communications, but is

Brainstorm instances when a communication barrier caused a problet in your life. Write a brief summary of what happened in the space below. Then identify steps you could take to avoid making (or encountering) this communication error in the future.	m

4.4 Keys to Effective Communication: Active Speaking

You have just identified how to be an active listener and how to avoid obstacles of listening by asking clarifying questions and reflecting back what you've heard. The next skill that you should learn is how to be an active speaker. Recall that there are three types of communication: verbal, nonverbal, and written. The following sections address different principles of effective message delivery (as the sender/speaker). Each principle that follows applies to all three communication types (verbal, nonverbal, and written).

Embrace Criticism

Criticism, whether warranted or not, is a part of life. Your ability to control how you react and respond appropriately can affect the direction a conversation takes in many positive ways.

It is best, and most productive, to assume that all criticism is meant to be constructive (regardless of the delivery) and respond accordingly. It's best to respond with appreciation and thanks.

criticize you specifically because they want you to react in a negative fashion and to look bad in front of others. By learning how to accept and respond to criticism, you'll be able to avoid this type of exchange.

	Think about a time when a parent, teacher, supervisor, or friencriticized you. Describe the situation and the criticism.
2.	How did the criticism make you feel? How did you respond?
	Are you proud of the way you handled the criticism? What mig you do differently if something like this happens in the future?

Or, if you disagree, you should respond with thanks for opening up the discussion around the topic followed with facts about why you

4. Did this experience change the way you offer feedback to others? If so, how?	What is the most tactful way to address this situation? What should you say or write?
Be Tactful	Be Honest Answer questions with honesty (but also remember to use tact). This
Tact or tactfulness is having sensitivity to what is proper and appropriate in dealing with others, including the ability to speak or act without offending others. Use tact in all situations. If you ask yourself, "I wonder whether I should say/write that?" then the automatic answer is "NO!" If you have any doubt about how a message might be received, don't say/write it.	means that you should not be "brutally honest" with people; just be sincere. For example, if the person responsible for designing a website asks what you think of it, be honest. But also consider that the question is one of personal taste/opinion, and it's more important to protect your working relationship than to criticize a design you may not appreciate. You might say, "I like the new interactive feature and Apply the Skills—Respond with Tact Imagine that a coworker has written a long email to the entire department to express her unhappiness with the way people use "reply all" when responding to emails. She feels that using "reply all" to say "thank you" or "good job" is inappropriate. She has brought up this issue at team meetings in the past, but because of the culture of the office, everyone else decided that using "reply all" was acceptable. Think about the most tactful way to address the sender of the email.	the images you chose! The color scheme isn't what I prefer, but that is really just a matter of personal preference." Don't elaborate on or embellish criticism. If really interested in your feedback, the person will question you further about the features you do not appreciate. 1. Have you ever given or heard given "brutally honest" feedback? If so, what happened and how might the feedback have been restated in a more tactful way?
Ask yourself: Should I send an email to respond? Why or why not?	continues
continues

decided that the exchange wasn't a good fit for the culture of your small department. You don't want to make this coworker feel that their ideas aren't appreciated, but you want to be honest that it's not going to happen. What could you say? Write your response in the area below.

Be Positive

Be cheerful and smile whenever dealing with others. This includes emails. Start off your email with a brief "I hope you are well" or other warm greeting. This simple statement will go a long way in opening the door for the recipient's willingness to listen to the message you are about to deliver.

For example, if you saw a coworker stay late to allow another person to leave in time to see his children's holiday show, jot down this information. Then, the next time you send that coworker an email, you can start off the email by noting what you observed and how much you appreciate having that person on the team.

Reply the Skills—Keep a Positivity Journal

Practice, practice! Being positive takes daily practice. Keep a "positivity journal" by your computer, workstation, or nightstand at home. Jot down things you experienced for which you felt appreciation as you go about your day. Refer back to this list whenever you need to be reminded of reasons to be positive throughout the day.

Respect Confidentiality

Assume that all conversations are to be kept confidential unless you know for certain that the topic is public knowledge. Even topics that seem insignificant to you may be considered highly personal or private to another person. Keeping this information private will establish you as a trustworthy person.

Apply the Skills—Avoid Workplace Gossips

Establishing yourself as a trustworthy person is important, and one way to do this is to refuse to further engage the discussion when someone appears to betray a confidence. One idea is to simply state that you would prefer not to hear information that you were not meant to hear.

Imagine that your coworker, with whom you have a friendship outside work, begins to tell you something that was shared with him in confidence. Using tact and honesty, write out what you could say to your friend to let him know that confidentiality is critical to relationships and therefore shouldn't be betrayed.

manufactures particular deposition of a particular part

Be Patient

The ability to remain calm is especially important when dealing with a personality type that is different from your own or when dealing with someone who is angry or upset. People who are upset typically want to know that they are allowed to express themselves. Shortcutting that process or interrupting speakers almost always makes them more upset. Take time to hear them out, and you'll often find that they are able to calm themselves down by expressing their frustration.

1.	What situations make you the most impatient?
2.	How do you act or behave when you are impatient?
3.	When was the last time you saw someone lose their temper? What happened? Would more patience have helped in the situation?

Additional Information

For more information about communicating with angry or difficult personalities effectively, check out the Soft Skills Solutions text Play Nice & Stay Employed! Workplace Relationships & Conflict Negotiations.

Use a "We" Mentality

Use "I" or "we" statements rather than "you" statements to avoid insulting the person with whom you're communicating. Using "you" statements places blame on others and implies that they are at fault or don't understand. For example, say you work with a person who likes to get straight to the point and you prefer detailed explanations. Instead of saying, "You talk really fast, and I am afraid it's going to cause me to make a mistake," you could say, "I am concerned that I may make a mistake if I don't get more details about what you are sharing with me. Could you please explain it again, slowly, so I can better understand what you need me to do?" Asking thoughtful questions can help you clarify and understand the group or person's perspective and learn more about their motivations, experiences, and understanding of the topic. Using "I" or "we" statements can help you ask clarifying questions that don't feel like personal attacks.

perspective and learn more about their motivations, experiences, and understanding of the topic. Using "I" or "we" statements can help you ask clarifying questions that don't feel like personal attacks. Apply the Skills—Identify the Words You Use For the next week, before sending an email, go back and reread the email and replace every use of the word I with we or our whenever possible. You'll begin to notice how often you use I when you could easily use we. In addition, take a look at some of the emails you receive. How many of these use inclusive wording? Record your observations in the space below.

Avoid Absolutes

Nothing will escalate a miscommunication faster than the use of words like always and never. The reason is that most people will immediately start processing all the evidence to disprove what has been stated. For example, when you say, "You never empty the trash," the receiver will immediately start thinking about all the times that you haven't emptied the trash, which isn't your point. A more effective way to express the same message would be to say, "I feel that our chores have become unbalanced and that I empty the trash more often than you do." That person may still disagree, but is more likely to focus on finding a solution than trying to mentally count the number of times one or the other of you emptied the trash.

Apply the Skills—Track Opinions Stated as Facts

Think of the last 10 conflicts in which you've been involved. How many of these conflicts started because someone used an absolute to state an opinion? As you go through your week, mentally note every time you find yourself using words like always and never. What trends do you see? Do you do this more often with one specific person? If so, why? What needs to happen to change the relationship? Record your thoughts below.

Attack Problems, Not Ideas

When you are working on a team project where problems will inevitably arise, attacking problems, not ideas, is critical. For example, let's say your boss has asked you to create a new process for delivering interoffice mail. If someone makes a suggestion that you totally disagree with, it would not be appropriate to say, "That is a stupid plan and will never work!" Instead, you could say, "One thing that concerns me with that approach is that it may create some confusion. Let's discuss it some more so I can better understand your thinking." This approach creates an environment of respect for others' opinions while also fostering honesty and collaboration.

When an interaction at work includes personal attacks, challenge yourself to bring the conversation back to addressing the problem, instead of attacking an individual's or group's idea. Ask yourself, "What is the issue? How can I address the issue without attacking the idea?" For personal attacks that have already happened, brainstorm ways you could have addressed the situation without attacking another person's idea. Consider if you have an underlying relationship issue with the person whose idea you attacked. Also consider how the interaction affected the group itself.

Apply the Skills—Redirect Ideas

Imagine that you have been assigned the role of a project leader within your workplace. You and your team are to brainstorm ideas for improving work conditions. One person on the team keeps throwing out very outlandish ideas such as, "Have an espresso machine in every office" and "Build a hair salon on-site!" Keep in mind that your workplace isn't Google and that you've been given instructions that no one expenditure can be greater than $500. Write out how you might redirect the conversation back to reality without insulting the person or attacking someone else's ideas.

"ゴリン Use of all these principles in all communications is critical to your present and future success. So, practice them every day!

C	Apply Speak	the and	Ski. d Li.	lls— sten	Analy	/ze	How	Well	You
	D		C.		. •		1 . 1

Brainstorm five interactions in which you experienced some problems and another five interactions in which you helped another person solve a problem or feel better about a situation. Identify the situation or exchange that was the most important or significant and record it in the space below.

Now answer the questions listed below in relation to the exchange you identified and analyze how you might work on improving your strengths and minimizing your weaknesses.

1. Did I immediately eliminate all distractions so that I could give the speaker my full attention? If so, how did this affect my ability to focus? If not, why not? What will I do differently next time? How did this negatively affect the exchange?

continues...

2.	Did I ask enough questions to ensure I understood the situation? If so, what additional information did I learn that helped me? Or, did I jump to the conclusion that I already understood the problem and immediately go into problem solving? If so, what happened as a result, and what will I do differently next time?
3.	When I reflected back to the speaker what I understood the message to be, how often did I find out that I misunderstood the message, and how did this affect the outcome of the conversation?
4.	How did I show empathy, either verbally or nonverbally, for the speaker? In what way did this improve the communication?

5.	. Was I able to avoid "you" statements and ask clarifying questions with tact? If so, how did this help? Or, did I use accusatory language in my questions or when discussing the situation? How did this affect the conversation?	8.	Overall, what f
6.	How tactful was I (honestly) when giving feedback or discussing a difficult situation? How can I improve?	9.	Overall, what fi
7.	Did I articulate my opinion effectively and honestly? If so, how so? If not, why not? What can I do to improve?
	continues

	Overall, what five things did I do right during this exchange?
١.
	Overall, what five things can I improve on next time, and how will I do so?

4.5 Summary

Being heard is important. Listening actively and speaking productively are the first two steps to becoming an effective communicator. Communicating effectively can be very difficult and requires alertness and awareness. It also requires empathy for yourself when you miscommunicate and for others when they struggle to be understood. Mastering communication helps you better understand a person or situation and enables you to resolve differences. Thus, you are able to build trust and respect and also create environments where creative ideas, critical thinking, problem solving, and thoughtfulness can flourish. By learning these effective communication skills, you can better connect with your spouse, kids, friends, and coworkers and improve your life by building and maintaining relationships.

Additional Resources

This text introduced you to many verbal and nonverbal communication skills to help you prepare for professional communication. You will also benefit from knowing the basics of professional etiquette (common rules and manners that exist in a professional setting). For more information on workplace etiquette, read How You Act & Dress Matters! Professional Etiquette & Image from the Soft Skills Solutions program.

Next Steps

Consider all you have learned and answer the following prompts:

1. From my experience, I consider these to be the three most important takeaways:

2	I plan to implement the following changes immediately:
·
. 1	feel I still need to work on the following area(s):
Ι	plan to keep improving by doing the following:

AT-HOME TRAINING SUMMARY QUESTIONS: September 16 September 29

NAME	COUNTY
Question #1	- From my experience, I consider these to be the 3 most important takeaways:
1
2
3
Question #2	- I plan to implement the following changes immediately:
Question #3 –	I feel I still need to work on the following area(s).
Question #4 -	- I plan to keep improving by doing the following:

This sheet and your timesheet are due by Monday, October 1, 2023 at 5:00pm. Fax to 330-535-2253 or scan and email to payroll@vantageaging.org.

TRAINING VERIFICATION FORM

Project Dir	ector to Compl	ete before tra	aining starts		County:
Job Seeker I	Name:				Pay Perio	d End Date: 9/	/29/23
Training Provided: At-home training packet 9/16/23 - 9/29/23 Check one: ODA
Location of	Training: N/A
Contact for	questions: Dust	in Henthorne	e 330-253-4	4597 x 352			-person Remote
Training Waiver FundedYes No
Job Seeker to Complete: If a lunch is taken, out/in times need to appear on the time sheet. Do not skip cells in between In/Out time if no break is tal	ken. Make sure h	ours are correc	ctly recorded a	and totaled in	the appropria
tnen cneck	your In/Out cells					1	1
	M/D/YY Training Date	H:MM In	H:MM Out	H:MM In	H:MM Out	Total Hours
	Truming Dutc		Out			10001110013
·				Total Tı	raining Hours:
"I agree t	hat this training	is part of my In	dividualized E				ed employmen. I certify oved by my Pro	oject Director	or Training Na	vigator and is	is a true recor	d of my attendance in training.	Job See	eker Signature	:				_
	"~
	Т	rainer Signatu	re:
_	sheets must be ro y result in the pa				-
30 1114	•	_{X:} 330-535		ext pay periou	. ITalisilit to	the Project Di	rector.
	SCAN TO EMAI
	SCAN TO EIVIAI	L: payrolle	yvantagea	girig.org			 -
Pro	ject Director App	oroval Signatur	e:				-
Payroll In	nitial:	Dept	#		Employee	#		